COMMITTED TO THE LEADING EDGE

Virtually every institution of higher learning—large and small—shares the challenge of trying to keep their faculty, researchers, and students on the leading edge of technologies moving so fast that skills are outmoded within two years.

A key tool for staying current in this hurricane of information is the Computer Society Digital Library (CSDL)—the leading computer technology knowledge source.

The CSDL provides a wide range of new content and resources beyond the printed page!

No Other Computing Resource Comes Close

The IEEE Computer Society Digital Library (CSDL) is the best research tool for all of today's hottest computing topics—including artificial intelligence, cybersecurity, big data, the Internet of Things, cloud computing, and predictive analytics—along with an unparalleled archive of invaluable research. With more than 700,000 top-quality articles and papers that are constantly being updated, the CSDL is the premier collection of computing periodicals and conference publications.

At the IEEE Computer Society, we're deeply committed to making this unique resource available to as many institutions as possible. That's why we've created a wide variety of subscription packages—with special pricing options such as tier, consortium, and multi-site pricing.

Contact us for specific ways we can serve your institution. You'll discover that the Computer Society Digital Library really is for everyone.

Contact Georgann Carter at +1 202 778 4712 or gcarter@computer.org to discuss your institution's needs.

Access to the Computer Society Digital Library has proven to be an invaluable resource to my research and my professional practice.
